Dear Ms. Blair:

Thank you for agreeing to serve the public in your new position as chairwoman of the FDIC. I am sure you have already found that in this position, you will be receiving many comments from the public about decisions you will be making. Please consider my quick comment regarding Wal-Mart's intention to enter the banking business.

Over the years, Wal-Mart has again and again proven itself to be a ruthless, untrustworthy business. By its very nature, banking demands that the banker hold a high level of public trust. No other business qualifies less for this public trust than Wal-Mart.

Thank you for your attention.

Sincerely,

Jack Stansfield
